

Let's talk safety...

You might already know that Registered Environmental Health

Specialists (Inspectors) conduct semi-annual inspections in every food establishment in our community, but have you ever wondered what exactly goes in to an inspection?

Inspectors work with the food service industry and the public to reduce or eliminate the known causes of food borne illness caused by things such as:

- Improper Temperatures
 - Cross Contamination
 - Poor Personal Hygiene & Handwashing Skills
- Inadequate Cooking/Reheating
- Unsafe Food Storage & Sources

During an inspection, each potential hazard discovered is assigned a deduction. If no violations are found the facility receives a perfect score of 100! If the facility receives a score below 70, they must be re-inspected and if violations have not been corrected the facility is closed until they are. If a "critical" violation is found the facility must correct the issue before the inspector leaves the premises.

Public health & protection is always the top priority!

With proper food handling practices, a food-handler can significantly reduce the spread of serious infectious diseases such as Norovirus (Norwalk), Hepatitis A, Salmonella and E. coli.

In an effort to recognize the hard work and dedication of our local food establishments that score 94% or higher on their Oregon State Facility Inspection Report, North Central Public Health District will be:

- Presenting the owner with a Certificate of Recognition for Exceptional Food Safety Compliance that can be proudly displayed.
- Publishing the scores of those facilities in this brochure that will be reproduced every six-months, following semi-annual inspections.
- Providing the opportunity for the facility to use this information in their own advertising and/or public service announcements through newspaper, radio or The Chamber of Commerce.

Please help us to recognize these facilities that are leading the way in food safety!
